Shopping Malls in the United States listing

1. Although every shopping mall is a bit different in design, shoppers often quickly feel comfortable in a new mall. That is because malls usually share certain features. You can almost always find most of the following: a department store, a pharmacy, a toy store, a book shop, clothing shops for all ages, shoe shops, a bank, and places to eat. These businesses are all under one roof. Most malls are enclosed, so that shoppers never have to go outdoors once they get to the mall. A few malls sometimes also have doors to shops on the outside of the mall. Every mall is surrounded by a large parking area.

Summary: The new mall is more comfortable because the features are more complete and have different design

comparation

2. Malls are not all exactly alike. In a suburb of Chicago, where many wealthy people live, malls are quite large and beautiful. One of these malls is two stories tall and houses about 50 businesses. These range from small specialty shops to large luxury department stores. The roof of the mall is made of glass and is twice as tall as the shops inside. Musicians play for the customers in the evenings, and trees and fountains are found in central seating areas. In a poor, rural town in southern Maine, however, a typical mall is plain and rather small. It might have a supermarket, a pizza parlor, a book and gift shop, a laundromat, and a bank. All its shops are found on one level, and the interior of the enclosed mall is plain and undecorated. Recorded music is piped in through speakers.

Summary: Malls in a suburb of Chicago are big, more complete, and fanchier than malls in rural town in Shoutern Maine

3. While shopping malls have changed American life, not all of their effects have been positive. Most of the shops and services found in malls are parts of large corporations. These businesses have taken away customers from smaller shops in the area and forced them to close. That has meant fewer individually owned businesses and less local control over jobs. In addition, malls are harmful to the environment. They have sometime been built on land that is important for the survival of birds and wild animals. Wherever they are built, they cover large areas with buildings and parking lots—instead of trees or grass. Thus, they contribute to the general loss of nature. And finally, malls are usually far from any town center, so people must use cars to get there. This results in increased air pollution and heavy traffic on the roads near the mall.

Summary: shopping malls have negative effects on individual business and enviroment

The Challenger Disaster Sequence

1. By 1984, NASA, the United States space program, had carried out many successful flights of the space shuttle. In fact, Americans were beginning to take the whole NASA program for granted. Then, the president announced that the next shuttle would carry a school teacher into space. Hundreds of teachers from all parts of the country applied for the job. They all wanted to be "the first teacher in space." During the next year, these adventurous educators were tested and examined and trained. At last, the choice was announced. A teacher from New Hampshire, Christa MacAuliffe, would be the first teacher-astronaut.

2. Many months of preparation and training followed the announcement. First, Christa went through intensive physical training. She had to be in top condition for the flight. Then she learned how to operate some of the delicate instruments on the Challenger space shuttle. Christa planned special lessons which she would teach from space. Finally, she trained with the other astronauts, so they could work as a team in space.

Summary: Christa trained with the astronouts to work as team in space

3. Everyone knows what happened on that terrible day in January, 1986. Early in the morning, the Challenger crew had a good breakfast and discussed their plans. They made sure they understood all of the work they would be doing during the flight. Later, they boarded a special van which carried them to the shuttle. The weather was rather cold, and some NASA officials wondered if they should put off the flight. After some discussion, they decided to go ahead. The Challenger took off over the Atlantic Ocean in Florida. Minutes later, it exploded in the air. All of the crew members died in the crash.

Summary: january 1986 its a terrible day, the cold weather caused the shuttle was Exploded and no one safe
